Press release:XING introduces Networking for graduates

Support for graduates introduced by Europe's leading business network

San Francisco, U.S and Hamburg, Germany, June 26, 2008 - From tomorrow, students and graduates will have the opportunity to personalise their online profile on XING (www.xing.com). The new status option "graduate/student" allows members to prominently showcase their educational backgrounds on their profiles. For recent graduates or even students still at university, these profiles on XING can be vital in meeting and contacting potential employers and alumni around the world.

"Professional networking should start before university ends," said Lars Hinrichs, CEO and founder of XING AG. "A profile on XING can ease the often difficult transition from student life to professional life."

XING profiles will now prominently display the university a member is attending, the subject being studied and the degree obtained. This enhancement will allow current students and recent graduates to draw the attention of prospective employers to their education. The university location and address will serve as a their 'business address' and can easily be updated when changing university or spending a semester abroad. When a member's professional situation changes — for example if he gets a job or starts a company — all he has to do is change his status from "student" to "employee", "freelance" or "entrepreneur", and the profile will be automatically converted to a XING business profile.

By adding this new support for graduates, XING expects to attract new members from the large number of students and recent graduates from universities and colleges around the world. There are already over 1,300 XING groups on university-related topics, including groups ranging from Harvard Community to University of Michigan Alumni and XING Cambridge.
